Chairperson's Statement

Monica Koep
Chairperson of the Board

Over the past eight years, the IPPR has helped to raise the level of policy debate in Namibia, and in so doing the Institute has contributed to the development of an open and stable democracy in the country and a growing culture of public dialogue around key developmental challenges and governance-related topics. We have done this by creating an issue-based, independent, and innovative research programme, the results of which have been disseminated to a wide range of individuals and institutions in Namibia and beyond.

In the year under review in this annual report, the IPPR's research sparked important discussions on policy issues as varied as Black Economic Empowerment (BEE), electricity pricing, small stock marketing and the quality of democratic governance.

This research was made available through the IPPR's website, which continued to receive over 100,000 hits in the year, and via the Institute's free distribution list which includes over 600 politicians, policymakers, business leaders, academics and interested members of the public. In addition, more than 30 articles published in Namibia's leading newspapers covered aspects of the IPPR's research agenda during 2007/08.

Challenges

These achievements took place even though the IPPR continued to operate in a difficult funding climate and experienced several staff changes. For the first time since the IPPR's inception, annual expenditure dropped below N$1 million. We are, therefore, extremely grateful for the excellent working relationships the IPPR has developed with key development partners and donors and their consistent financial support. First and foremost we thank the Ford Foundation, which generously extended its core funding for the IPPR until 2010. Our thanks are also due to the Embassy of Finland, which has consistently underpinned the institution's research agenda and was the main provider of project-linked funds during the 2007/08 financial year. Diversifying our sources of funding remains a key challenge for the IPPR. We particularly want to tap into local funding from businesses, organisations and individuals who recognise the crucial role that rigorous, independent research on matters of national importance can play in Namibia's development.

The Institute continued to operate with just two full-time staff members – an Executive Director and an Office Manager. In order to fulfil its objectives in the most cost-effective manner, the IPPR has employed a range of freelance researchers and consultants on a project-to-project basis to contribute to the IPPR's core research programme. The task of developing a team of researchers can be a difficult one in the Namibian context, since experienced economists, political analysts and specialists in other areas remain thin on the ground. Despite such constraints, in the year under review the IPPR worked with 17 research associates, guest researchers and interns – the majority being young Namibians still finding their feet in the world of research.

The way ahead

The Executive Director, Mr. Daniel Motinga, resigned in September 2007, after two years at the helm of the organisation, to take up a senior position at a banking institution. Mr. Graham Hopwood took up the reins as Executive Director in January 2008. The Office Manager, Ms. Enid de Klerk, resigned at the end of 2007 to move to Walvis Bay. She was replaced by Ms. Lizaan van Wyk.

On behalf of the Board of Trustees, I would like to extend our sincere appreciation to the former Executive Director, Mr. Motinga, who successfully guided the IPPR through a period of restructuring and helped to ensure the future viability of the organisation. Our gratitude is also due to Professor Bill Lindeke, the Acting Executive Director from October to December 2007, who helped to smooth the transition between permanent Executive Directors. Fortunately the IPPR can still benefit from Mr. Motinga's experience, as he remains a Board member. In addition, the Board would like to thank Ms. De Klerk for her enthusiasm and commitment during her period as Office Manager.

Having anticipated constraints and carefully planned change in advance, the IPPR is now well-positioned to advance substantially on its mission to deliver quality, independent research on social, political and economic issues that affect development and economic and democratic progress in Namibia.

Financials

The year 2007/08 saw a substantial reduction in expenditure, due to the restructuring of the IPPR during the previous two years and an increasingly difficult funding environment. Total expenditure fell from N$1,018,410 to N$821,682 in the year under review. Income was also down, from N$1,206,411 to N$829,563. Both income and expenses fell by 30 percent year on year. The Institute was able to adjust its activities in line with available resources. The only core funder during the year was the Ford Foundation, an organisation that has steadfastly supported the IPPR since its inception. Apart from that, significant project funding was received from the Embassy of Finland.

Accumulated funds at the end of the 2007/08 financial year stood at N$316,783, compared to N$308,902 in the previous financial year.

Staff and administration

During the 2007/08 financial year, the IPPR appointed a new Executive Director to replace Daniel Motinga who resigned at the end of September 2007 to join the private sector. Professor Bill Lindeke took over as Acting Executive Director for the months of October to December, while the post was advertised and a recruitment process took place. Graham Hopwood took up the post of Executive Director from January 2008. Graham had previously been the project manager of the Public Dialogue Centre at the Namibia Institute for Democracy (NID) and had worked as a journalist and sub-editor at The Namibian from 1992 to 2004. He had previously worked at the IPPR conducting research for the book, Guide to Namibian Politics, which the IPPR co-published with the Namibia Institute for Democracy (NID).

Due to good planning and the hands-on involvement of the Board, the transition between Executive Directors went smoothly. This was in part facilitated by the fact that Daniel Motinga remained on the IPPR Board, in order to share his experiences and offer support to management. Apart from the changes at director level, the Office Manager, Enid de Klerk, resigned at the end of 2007 to move to Walvis Bay. Her replacement, Lizaan van Wyk, was appointed in late December 2007. Invariably, these staff changes resulted in some loss of impetus in terms of the production of research papers towards the end of the year.

The IPPR Board meets regularly on at least a quarterly basis and convened five times in the 2007/08 period. During the year Dr. Pandu Hailonga-van Dijk, an experienced sociologist working with health and gender issues, joined the Board, along with Professor Bill Lindeke, a retired political science professor who most recently lectured at the University of Namibia. Nama Goabab resigned from the Board in early 2008 to concentrate on his work as Secretary of the National Assembly.

While the IPPR employed only two permanent staff at the end of the period under review, a variety of interns, project consultants, research associates and guest researchers contributed significantly to the IPPR's research output

- Bill Lindeke presented a version of How Are We Doing? to the Annual Symposium of the Electoral Institute of Southern Africa (EISA) in Johannesburg

- Understanding Namibia's Growth Drivers by Daniel Motinga (at the Namibia Chamber of Commerce and Industry (NCCI) Business Summit)

Conferences and Policy Seminars

IPPR staff members, interns and research associates participated in various policy-related conferences and workshops throughout the year under review. These included meetings on Namibia's Housing, Income and Expenditure Survey, NDP3, Local Authority Reform, and Poverty.

Research Dissemination

The main means of disseminating IPPR research is the Institute's website (www.ippr.org.na), which includes downloadable PDFs of all the research completed since 2001. Unfortunately, in 2007 not many of the research papers were printed as conventional hard copies, due to budget constraints. The electronic mailing list has increased to 654 individual up-to-date e-mail addresses and serves as an important multiplier.

The box below shows that the number of hits and the amount of information downloaded has plateaued since 2004/05. The regularly updated IPPR website has become an indispensable resource for a range of people in Namibia, as well as those abroad wanting to find out more about the country (with feedback from users mentioning its accessibility, usefulness and relevance). Our website hits continue to exceed 100,000 and stood at 117,342 during the period under review. Website downloads amounted to 7.15 gigabytes. These figures were slightly down on the previous year – reflecting the lower number of published research papers.

Maintaining visibility

The Institute continued to feature prominently in the local media through its research and commentary on current affairs. Notably, news services provided by private radio and television stations have started to use the IPPR as a source of commentary and analysis in the year under a review (a trend that has developed since). Previously, most media citations had been in the press. During the year radio interviews were given to Radio 99 on several matters and to the Voice of America on the Swapo Congress. IPPR Research Associate Bill Lindeke appeared on NBC Television's Talk of the Nation programme discussing governance in Africa.

The number of press citations decreased from 57 in the 2006/07 financial year to 33 in the current year. IPPR researchers gave commentaries to the media on various current issues, including BEE policy, Electricity Pricing, Small Stock Marketing (a debate which was sparked by a paper published in December 2006), the National Budget and the landmark Swapo Congress of late 2007.
